- 270 defense spending topped $350 billion: "Drive to Expand Defense Persists: Eisenhower Parting Advice on Undue 'Influence' Largely Forgotten," New York Times, 26 March 1961.
- 270 roughly $3 trillion: The figure of $3 trillion (actually $2.7 trillion) is derived by using a price index that is specifically designed for federal national defense expenditures. This is available at the Web site of the Bureau of Economic Analysis, an agency of the U.S. Department of Commerce (found at <http://www.bea.gov/national/nipaweb/TableView.asp#Mid>). Using the midpoints of the presidencies of Dwight Eisenhower (1957, quarter 1) and George W. Bush (2005, quarter 1), gives price indexes of 15.638 and 120.843, respectively. Dividing the second by the first yields the current dollar value of one dollar of 1957 defense expenditures, which would be 7.728 dollars. Converting $350 billion (from the 1953–1961 period) into current dollars is accomplished by multiplying 350 by 7.728, which yields 2,705 billion, or 2.7 trillion. Thanks to Jim Campen for assistance with these figures.
